A most notable event in the history of the National Guard of Pennsylvania was the reception tendered by the Division Commander, Major General Charles Miller, to the Governor and Commander-in-Chief, at Franklin, on the afternoon and evening of September 29. The event was notable not only on account of the representative gathering of men of affairs, men of the sword, men of the cloth, men of the bench and bar, men of politics and the fair daughters of the Keystone State, but in the social aspect, wherein the soldiers of the State and the civilians of the State were brought together, mutually interested, and given an opportunity to meet and interchange thoughts, emanating from each standpoint, all for the good of the Grand Old Commonwealth.

To many officers of the Guard the occasion was an opportunity to be brought into contact with their commanding officers, the General and the Governor, when all the pomp of military life was present, but the rigidity of military duty was absent. And it gave the officers the chance to learn the kindly natures, the considerateness, and the high position, as men, their superiors occupy.

regiments almost a score were present. Through the forethought of the General a special rate of transportation had been arranged, bringing the railroad cost of the travel to a minimum figure, and then, in addition, for those living afar from Franklin, special Pullman cars were provided, with the compliments of the General. The principal party left Philadelphia on Monday evening, four sleepers making up a section of number nine, on the P. R. R., and in it was Governor Pennypacker and family, Adjutant General Stewart and Mrs. Stewart, and a throng of officers of the Governors' Division and Brigade staffs, and those of the line from the Eastern part of the State.

Everything for the comfort of the guests was provided, and that the provisions were just suitable to the occasion is evident because the train arrangements were under the direct charge of that unexcelled quartermaster, Lieutenant Colonel William F. Richardson. Arriving at Franklin on Tuesday, at noon, it appeared as if a general holiday had been decreed to greet the State Executive and the others of the General's guests. Thousands of people were gathered at the station and a ceremonious touch was given through a guard of honor, com-

GOVERNOR PENNYPACKER AND PARTY EN-ROUTE TO FRANKLIN, SEPTEMBER 29, 1903.

Two years ago General Miller tendered a reception to the then Governor and Commander-in-Chief, and the event was considered something extraordinary. This year's function as far outstripped the previous one as does a division camp that of the camp of a single regiment.

Invitations had been extended to all the principal officers of the Guard and all men prominent in civil walks in life were likewise bidden to participate in the ceremonies. The acceptances and the attendance was a tribute to the Division Commander. Never before had the beautiful town of Franklin, the home of the General, contained such a gathering of men notable in the affairs of the State. From every section they journeyed thither and when they left for their homes it was with a feeling that they had been broadened and bettered by their trip and what they had seen.

Nearly every organization composing the National Guard of Pennsylvania was represented by one or more officers, from some posed of Company "F," Sixteenth Infantry, commanded by Captain Shafer, being drawn up and rendering the honors as the Governor was escorted to an awaiting carriage.

The guests were housed at the magnificent new hotel, The Alsace, and, as soon as lunch was disposed of, they were escorted to various portions of the exceedingly pretty city, and shown over the many industrial plants, all of which are controlled by the General. A special point visited was the Galena office building, where the Major General has his offices. Cities many times the size and population of Franklin cannot boast of anything in the way of an office building to compare with it. Not only is it most magnificently appointed, but the air of business which pervades is well marked through the discipline of the employees and the perfectness of the appointments.

Such an occasion as that of giving pleasure to his friends is the one to bring out the warm-heartedness, the tact, and the broadness of the Division Commander. The General beamed with pleasant welcome. His greeting to those high in military and official life was not one whit more warm, more sincere, than that bestowed upon the young lieutenant just appearing as an officer. To every one was the glad hand of comradeship extended. The visitors saw the General at home, and they saw the estimation and the affection with which he is held by his fellow townsmen.

The formal receptions were held at the Nursery Club, which had been most magnificently embellished for the occasion. That prince of good fellows, Major "Lew" Beitler, was the General's right-hand man in the arrangement of affairs, and the beauty of the decorations, as well as the perfect smoothness with which everything was conducted, testified fully to the Major's ability as a major-domo.

The afternoon reception to the Governor was of the civilian order. His Excellency was greeted by thousands of the citizens of Western Pennsylvania. The officers of the staff assisted, wearing dress uniforms, adding a touch of additional color to the scene.

But it was in the evening that the full glory burst forth. Then the exquisite embellishments were seen at their best. The scene was brilliant, scintillating, beyond the power of portrayal in written or printed characters. The big ball-room was a dream of splendor, the color scheme being a delicate harmony that blended with exquisite exactness with the gay gowns of the ladies and the gorgeous uniforms of the men. The division staff, appearing in all the splendor of the new "Special Full Dress," authorized for evening wear at social functions, caused many a flutter beneath lace and dimity.

The entire club-house was given up to the General's guests, and from early until late there was a perfect congestion of people in each of the spacious apartments. The reception proper was held in the large room to the right of the entrance, where Governor Pennypacker, Mrs. Pennypacker, and Miss Pennypacker were established, and then next was General Miller, and then the members of his and the Governor's staffs, in order, with their ladies. Passing the receiving line, the guests proceeded to the ball-room, where attempts at dancing were futile, owing to the crush, until late in the evening. It was in the ball-room that the full splendor of the decorations were apparent. Gauzy material of delicate hues were festooned, caught up, clustered and gracefully bestowed in endless profusion, but always in delightful harmony. Thousands of electric light bulbs glistened, their vivid rays being reflected from the flashing jewels worn by the ladies and the gold lace and ornamentation on the uniforms of the men. At the far end of the ball-room the entire wall was covered by a "burst," whereon the red, white and blue keystones of the three brigades scintillated separately and then together in the mark of the division.

Taken all together the reception was the most brilliantly successful affair that has ever been given within the confines of the State, and the participants owe a vote of thanks to the big-hearted Division Commander for the opportunity to be present.

Such a function makes decidedly for the good of the Guard. It brings the officers together in a social way, provides the opportunity for interchange of opinions and sends everyone home with the feeling that they have been attending something worth being at, and happy that they were present.
